"A Afid of prore Childe Harold, in which the choice scenes of a continental tour are struce upon the alken thread of a graceful and lively nurrative."

"This is a quinit. chatty and graphic book of travels, fall of general paths of paths, humor, faury and brilliant delineation."

"When have certainly, since Thackerar, had no such pleasant terrist; incidents, adventures, comic as well as serious, anecdotes, decryticas, poetry, and suffer are most happly integringled, and the result is as delatiful a volume for a number due of a water evening as we have seen for a long time." [Phile, Evening Bolletin,

"This is an emisculty cluster and readable work, which we venture to predict will at once secure its author a distinguished place sanon American writers.

"This is a work of decided genits; witty, observant, Rancy descriptive and posticul,—a kind of traveling idy, sung out easily, and for the pleasance of singing, by one whose heart was full of the stir, associations, and beauty of European life." [N. Y. Evengelist.

"This is no ordinary book. It is written by one who has the ore most ballows, making each tone of thom excluded with corresponding pass in review before the poet; and the transatiantic scenes which pass in review before the verter are tentsched with corresponding lights and shadows, making each tone of thom echocies Mannine.

"In this age of inquiry and progress, it will hardly satisfy the thinking mind to deny the truth of any proposition, because it cenflicts with old ideas cherished though they may be by a thousand associations, and supported by an array of great names which have given them an odor of sanctity."

"Deciliably the most hold and interesting book relating to 'Spirit nalism' that has yet been published. If regarded only as a psychological romance, it is better worth persual than any novel more current. Having found some of the works of this school decidelly hard reading, we took this is hand rather out of regard to the author (in whose integrity we have all confidence) than from any attraction to the subject but, having secure it, we could hardly by it down till it was finished; and we would not only a produce that the know what those "Spiritual Manifestations" are, and whither they tend, to procure 'Supernai Theology, which covers but 112 pages, and coats but a quarter.
